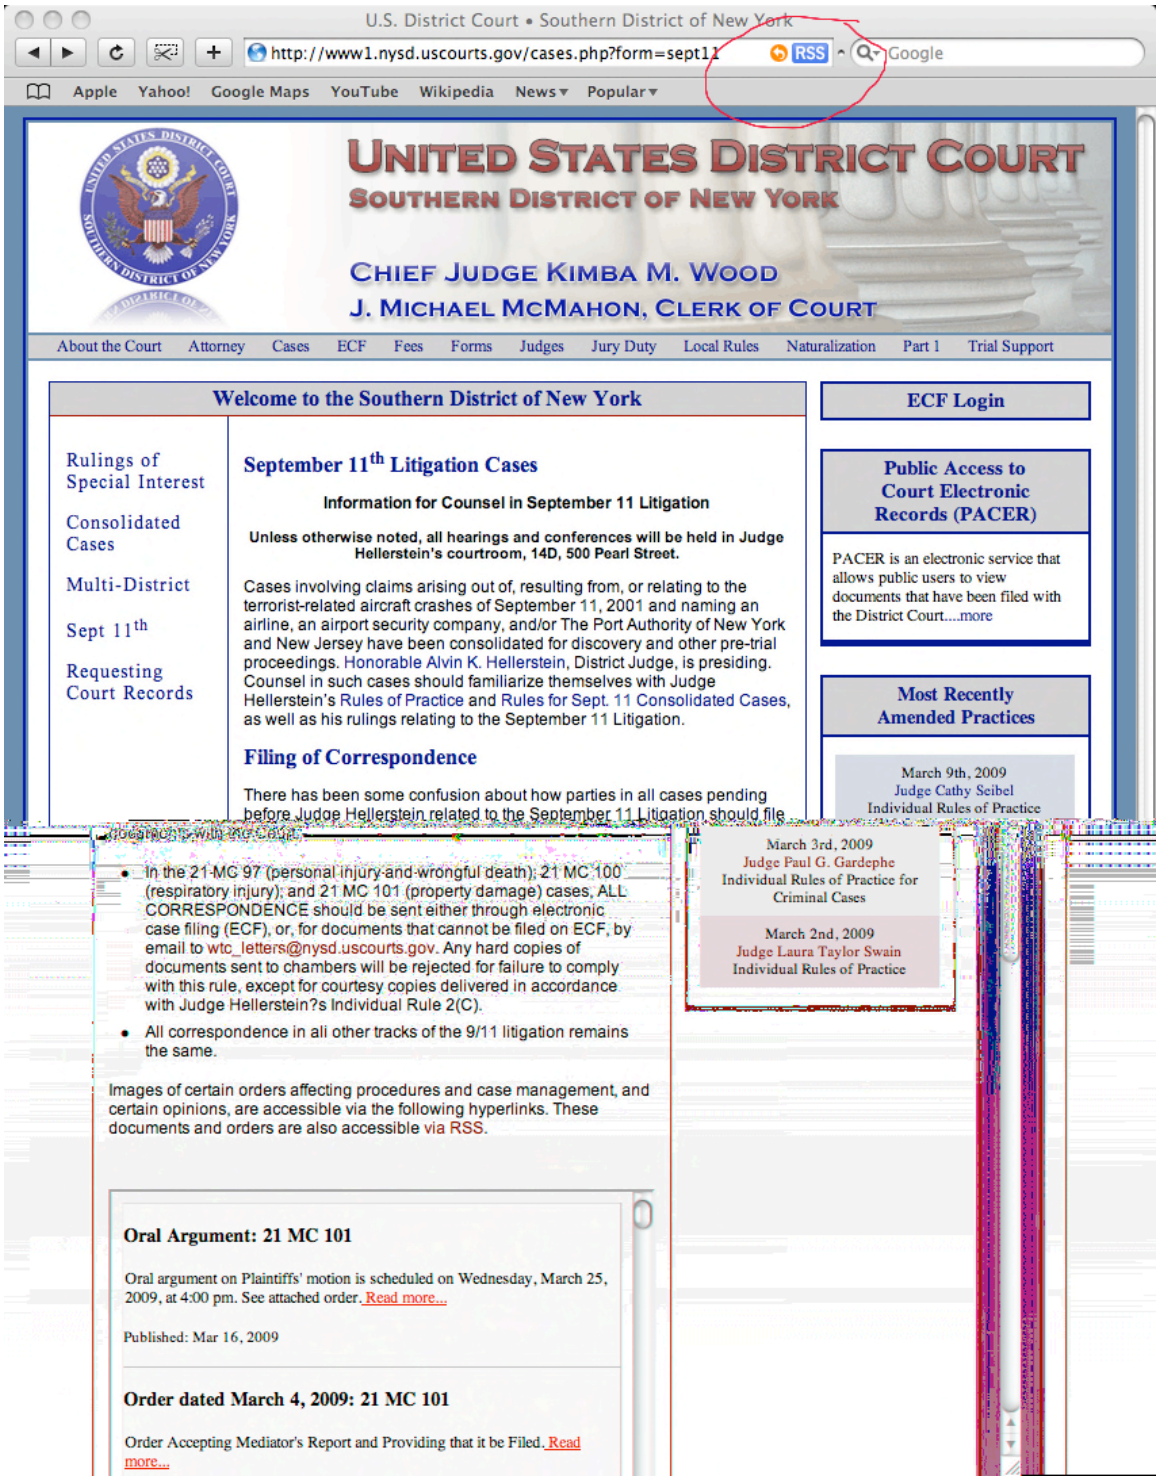
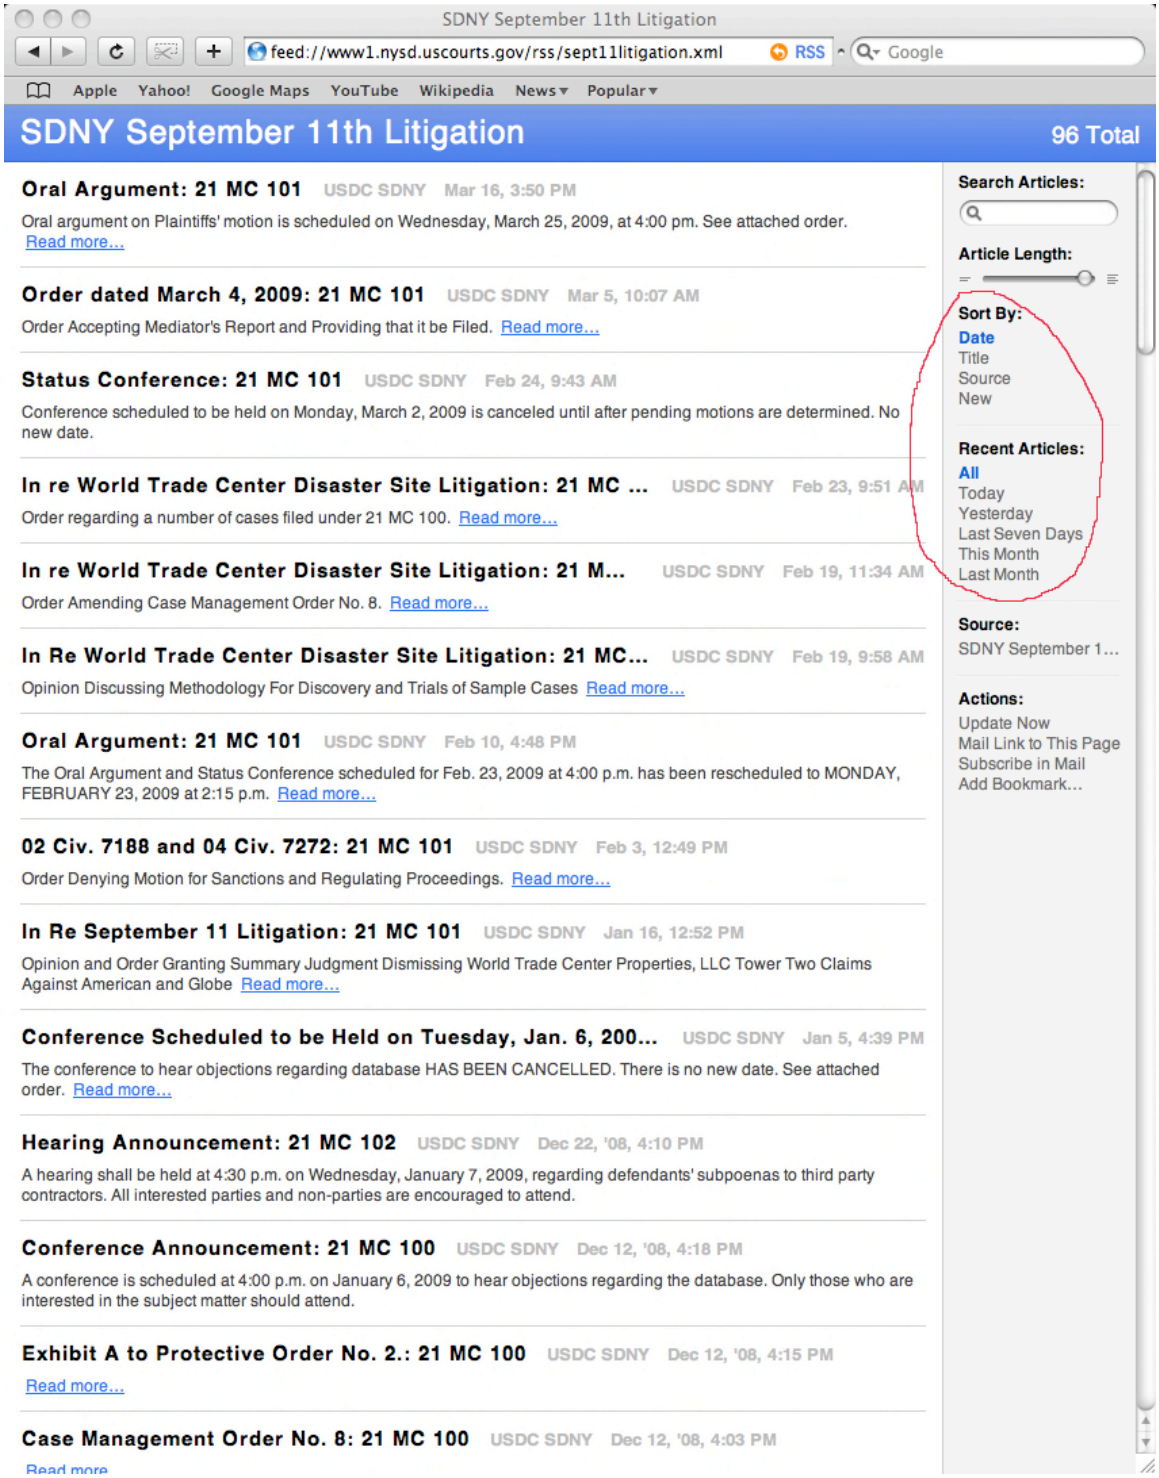
Viewing RSS Feeds With Apple Safari

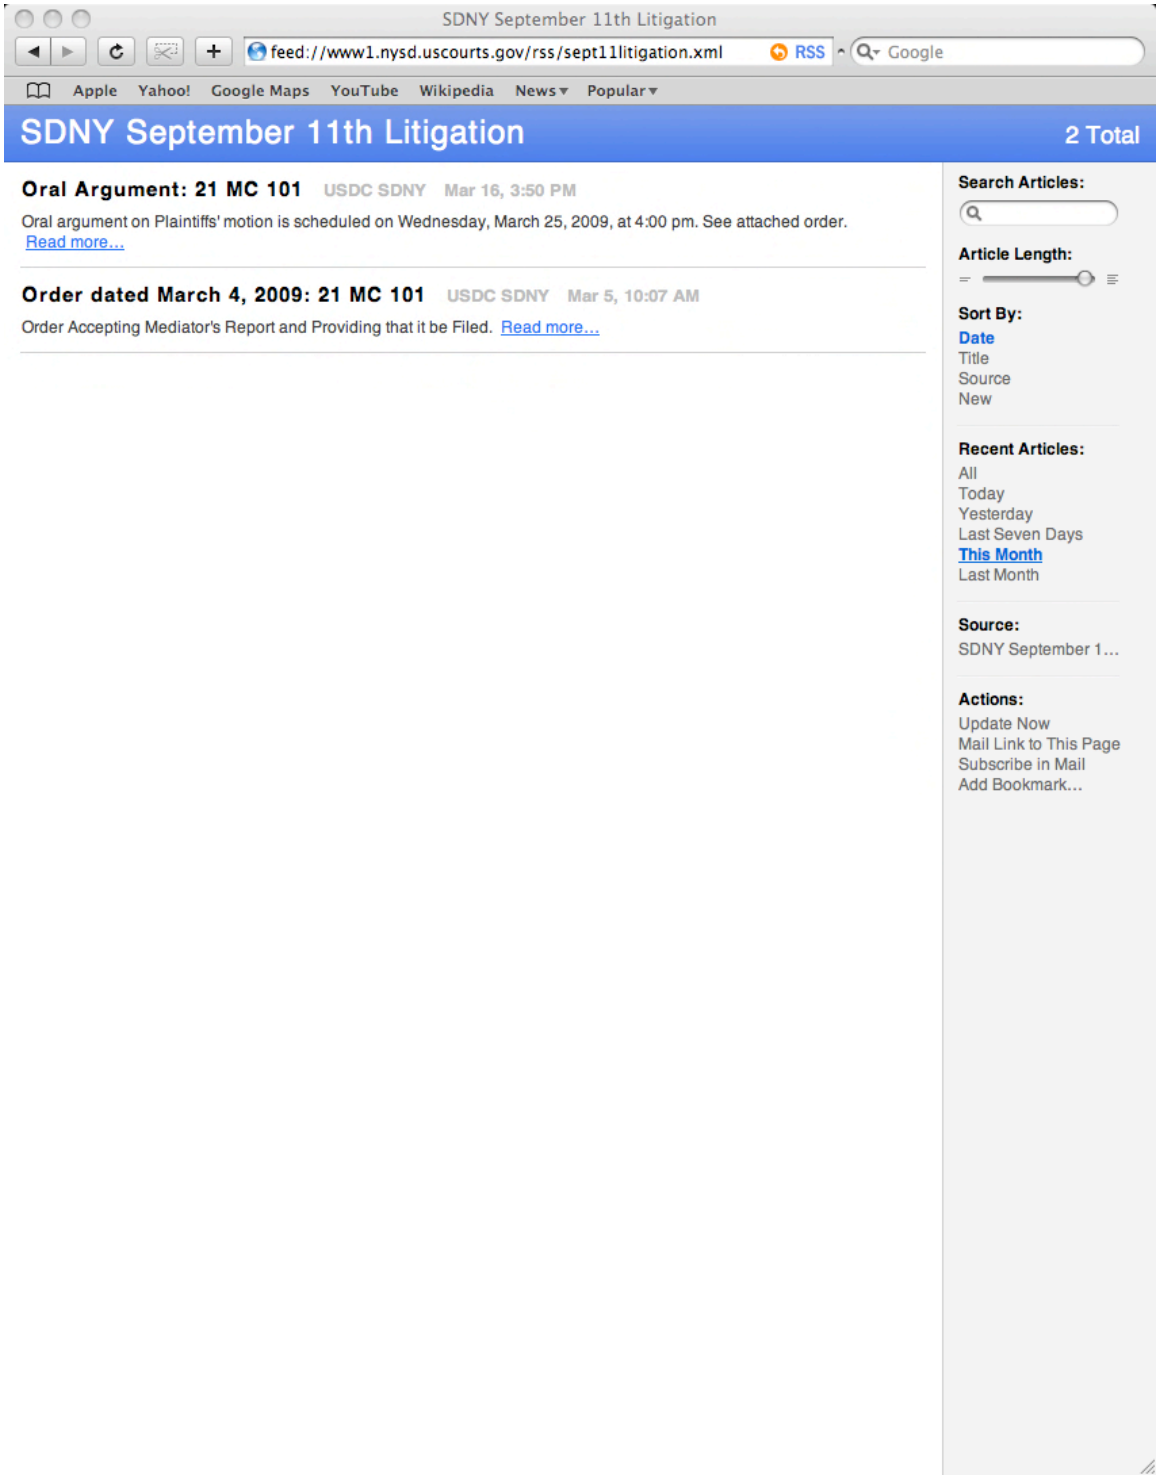
When using Apple's Safari browser to view a web page that supports an alternative RSS format, the letters "RSS" will appear in a blue font at the right-hand end of the URL bar.



Clicking on that blue RSS icon will cause the page to be redisplayed in its alternative, RSS style. When viewed in this latter manner the individual news items on the page may be sorted, grouped and filtered using the command links at the right edge of the page.

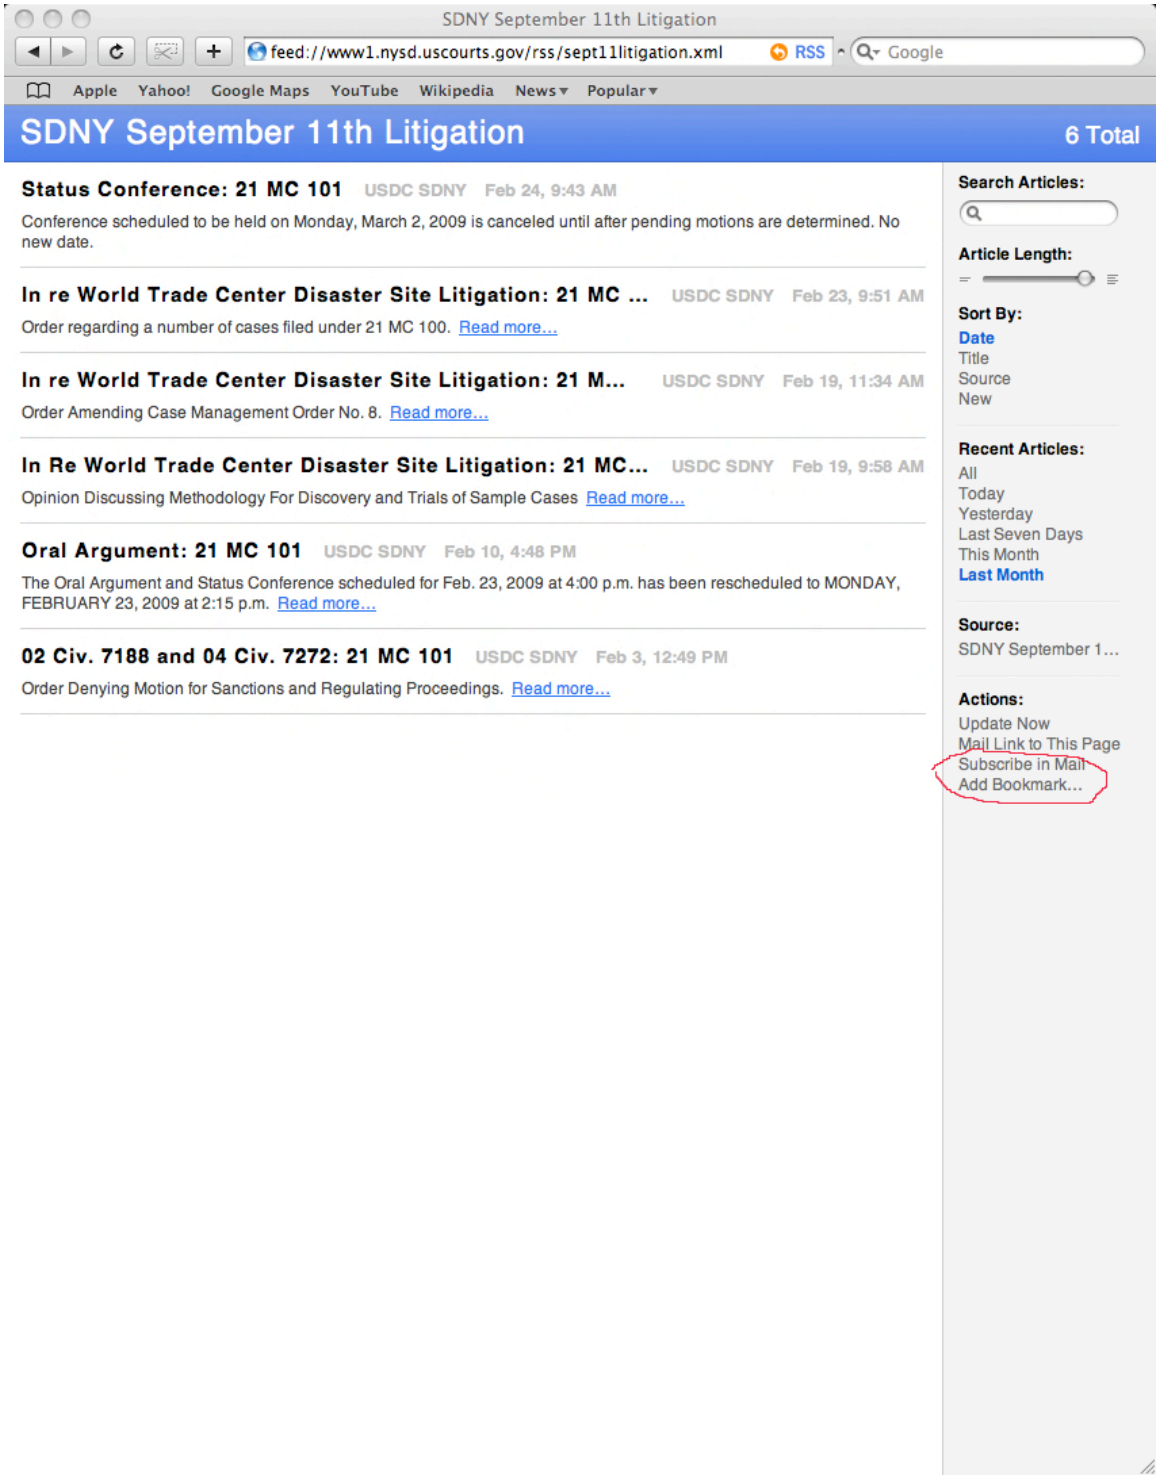


For example, clicking on the "This Month" link will limit the number of articles shown on the page to those published during the current calendar month.



By clicking either on the boldface title of any article or on the "read more…" hyperlink, your browser will show you the complete text of the news article. In the case where the news article relates to an order or an opinion of the court your browser will open a copy of the order or opinion in PDF format. (Screen photo omitted for brevity.)

Likewise, clicking on the "Last Month" link will show all the articles published during the previous calendar month.

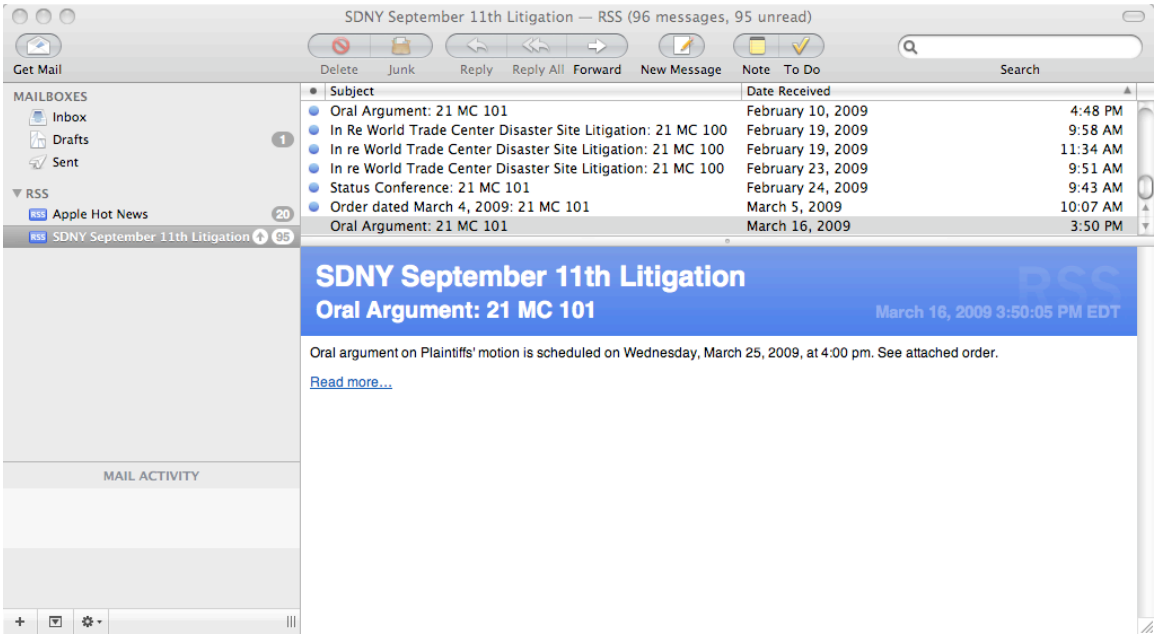


Subscribing To An RSS Feed Using Either Apple Safari or Apple Mail

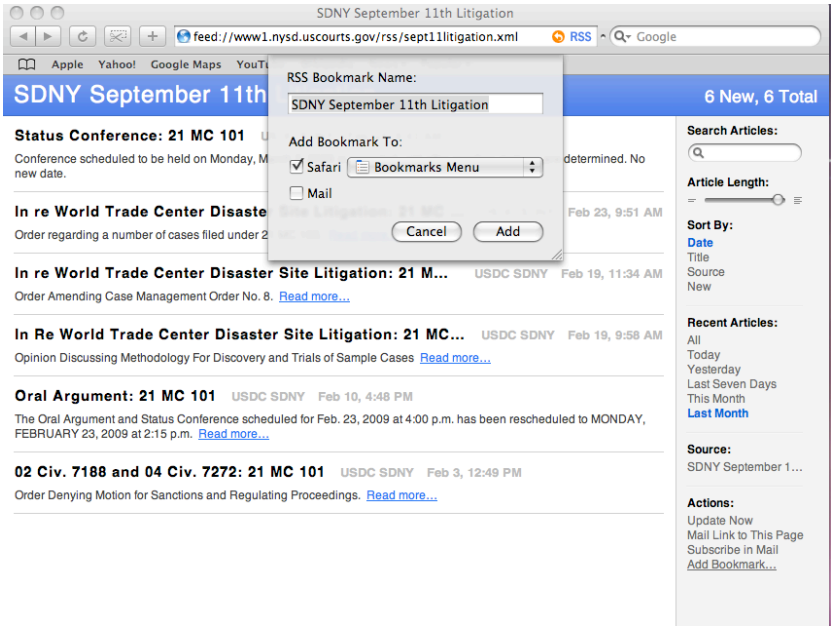
By the term subscribe we mean that your computer will automatically reload the RSS-format web page at periodic intervals in search of newly published information.

Safari provides two methods for making a subscription (see red highlight in prior photo):

- "Subscribe in Mail" – Makes news articles appear in your Apple Mail program's "Inbox" as new, unread messages,



- "Add Bookmark" – Makes news articles appear in Safari's "Bookmarks" menu or on the Bookmark Bar.



With both programs you have the option via their respective "Preferences" settings to select the frequency with which they will automatically return to the web site in search of new information, as well as the manner in which the articles are presented.

Henceforth, every time that you launch Safari or Mail these programs will update any RSS subscriptions that you may have made with them, and they will continue to seek out new information at the periodic interval you have set for as long as the programs remain running on your Mac.
